Performing Arts Institute of Wyoming Seminary – updated 2011	Summer is the season when serious students of music, dance and theater are free to immerse themselves in the arts; to learn and to grow, to practice and rehearse, to observe and participate. It is a time, as well, for these students to bond with peers and professionals who share their passion and support their goals – people who “speak the same language” on every level. Because attending a summer arts program can be such a life-changing experience, it is important to select the right program. University of Michigan – School of Art & Design – updated	The Portfolio Prep Program , a one-week residential program for current high school freshmen, sophomores, and juniors, focuses on producing a first rate admission portfolio. Under the direction of the School of Art & Design faculty and staff, students spend a minimum of six hours each day in intensive studio instruction, honing the drawing skills that will give their portfolio polish and sophistication. The program stresses life drawing, and the use of colored pencils, graphite and charcoal will add variety and depth to the portfolio. Students also learn how to select works for a competitive portfolio and how best to present their work. By the end of the week, students will understand what goes into a strong portfolio and will have the foundation for their own successful admission portfolio.
